JOSIAH TANNEHILL.

Pittſburgh, Oct. 13, 1796.

To the Political Free Thinker,

SIR.

I very reluctantly attempt a few observations on your laft publication in this Gazette; but the occafion you have given, and the call you have made, feems to render the attempt indifpenfable. In my late addrefs to the public under the prefent fignature, I thought had carefully avoided every thing which might even be conftrued into individual offence, to the political free thinker. I rather thought that I had dropt fome expreffions which were complimentary his performance, and refpectful to his character. But notwithftanding the caution, I find you have declared your intention of "refenting and defpifing the infult you have received as a Weftmorelander, by that publication."

It is true, I faid that the manifeft defign of your publication, was, to promote the re-election of Mr. Findley; but I caft no reflection upon the attempt, but immediately loft fight, both of your defign and performance. I might have added as a further proof of my intention not to offend, that a man may, with very righteous intentions, be employed in promoting a defign, which, in the opinion of another, may be highly reprehenfible. No doubt you confider yourfelf as being very laudably employed in exculpating Mr. Findley of the charges againft him—in extolling his virtues,—and in recommending him to the further confidence of the public. I on the other hand, and with equal pretentions of rectitude, "concured the neceffity of counteracting that defign," by expofing and cenfuring what I confider as the political "errors and crimes," of that gentleman. Here then it would appear that each of us have equal pretentions to a rectitude of conduct, in promoting by oppofite attempts, what we fincerely believed to be, objects of public utility.

But Sir, you confider yourfelf as implicated in the fuppofed infult offered to the Weftmorelanders, and you feem very willing to tender your fervice as their champian. I am Sir a Weftmorelander as well as you; and do feel as fenfibly for any misfortune which may have a tendancy to degrade our character in the eyes of the world. I partake in a fmall degree, of fome of thofe endearing enjoyments, which will ever prove the ftrongeft bonds of fecuring our attachment to our country; and I will venture to fay, that I have its intereft, honor, and reputation, as much at heart, as any one within the limits of the county. It was under the inftance of thefe conftderations, that I fuggefted the obfervations, which you have thought proper to difpofe and refent. I have been a Weftmorelander fince ever the country bore that name, & I have alfo a right to know the people & their political fentiments; and I know a very conftderable number of them, viewing them in any light whatever, are fuch as would do honor to any country. In fpeaking of any general fentiment, opinion or difpofition, there always is, or ought to be, numerous exceptions. Where any allufion is made to the people, efpecially to "us Weftmorelanders,"—it is eafy to perceive that thofe only are meant, who are under the ftrongeft delufion,—who are moft under the influence of Mr. Findley's political principles, and are moft infected with the poifon of his doctrine upon government. What you have termed a "black picture"—was intended as the portrait of a certain clafs of people, who have occafionally fallen under the particular obfervation of the painter. The fhoe was intended for thofe it might fit; and thofe of a contrary difpofition, will never think of applying it to their feet. If either nature or art, has fo moulded the political body of any man, as to render this a fuitable garment for him; that is certainly no fault of mine.

You fay my publication is "one of that kind, that fhall never be anfwered by you." I hope you dont immagine that I fhall feel the leaft mortified at fuch a declaration. You certainly could not difcover in it, the fmalleft defire of extracting an anfwer, or enterin into controverfy with any one. But I prefume you muft allude to fom thing which you fuppofe offenfive, clofer to your piety, or your delicacy. It is true, I made ufe of a very common place phrafe, when I faid, that the devil was the author of fin. Perhaps the repeating a name of fuch offenfive found, as fome fuppofes may be confidered, as a rude unguarded expreffion. Or perhaps a belief in a ftory, of fuch fabulous ftructure as many confider it, as that of Eve and the ferpent, may have merited nothing but filent contempt. But I cannot conceive how either the expreffion or the belief fhould prove offenfive, even to the moft rigid piety; efpecially, when the name, and the innumerable offices affigned to this univerfal functionary, conftitutes fuch a conftderable part of pulpet oratory. I have faid again," that if the faction to which Mr. Findley was the dupe, thought proper to go to the devil, he would furely be found laging at their heels." This may probably be thought a rude degrading kind of expreffion; but it appeared to me, the moft fuitable language for conveying the ideas I had formed of himfelf, and the conduct of his party. It certainly did appear to me that they were making very hafty ftrides on that journey, when they laboured with fuch uncommon perfeverance to deftroy the peace and happinefs of this country, and involve us in a war with Britain by the rejection of that treaty. If we believe that this confoling fempter is univerfally employed in inftigating and directing the evil actions of men, I know no reafon why politicians fhould efcape his intrigues, more than others. It is reafonable to fuppofe, that he fhould be as fucceffefully employed in the councils of the nation, as in the religion of the church.

As to the other parts of that addrefs, I cannot believe that either the language or the ftile, could offend the moft fcrupulous delicacy. I fhould have bluthed indeed had it been difgraced with the fcurrillity of that doggrel performance, which lately appeared, clothed with the hypocritical garment of Philanthrophy and benevolence. The low pittiful epithets of "dog, afs, puppy, araftocrat, and cox comb; with other copious difcharges of fuch like excrements, have not debafed any part of my fubject or language.

Such a production can only be confidered as the miferable fruit of uncultivated barren genius; that can only fubftitute a collection of beggarly words and phrafes in the room of language and fentiment. But we ought not to be offended with any of the creatures for the exertion of thofe talents with which they are endowed, or to which the laws of nature have fimply confined them. Where nature has partially withheld her bountiful gifts, to any animal that affumes the name of man; & where that man has not been improved, by a liberal education, a cultivated underftanding, and refined manners, we need not be furprifed to find, that in imitation of the beafts he has named, he can only bark and bray.

The language of ridicule which you have ufed in calling for my name, fcarcely deferves a ferious anfwer. You fay I "ought to give my name to the public, and there is fcarce a doubt of my being fent to Congrefs in the place of Findley." Here it would appear to me that you totally miftake your man, if you ferioufly fufpected, that this was my view. I do anfwer you Sir that the man who addreffes you now, poffeffes juft fo much of that independant "ariftocratical pride" [as it is often termed,] as will for ever preferve him from defcending to the humiliating debafing condition, of being a candidate for any elective office whatever. He thinks too contemptibly of the means, by which many repreſentatives [but not all] from the Weftern Country, have fecured elections for feveral yearspaft. If he has any ambition it is in that of enjoying a private independance, which places him far above the view of a dirty lucre, arifing from the niggardly favingsof a fix months feffion.

I have now only to notice the lofty tone, in which you have affected to refent and defpife my former publication. At this I am neither furprifed nor concerned. But there I think I can meet you upon equal ground; for if I miftake not, I think I have as good a knack as yourfelf, of defpifing both men and meafures, where a fuitable occaffion prefents. The declaration which I then made, I know repeat—"That fhould it give offence to Mr. Findley or his adherents, to me it was a matter of the moft perfect indifference." I am conficious of having intended nothing, but appeared to me, from the cleareft light and beft information, a ftatement of incontrovertable truths and abfolute facts. How far I have miffed my object, I leave it to men of information and candour to determine.

As I cannot gratify you in giving my name for the purpofe you have mentioned, I fhall therefore continue my former fignature.

Foreign Intelligence.

LONDON, MONDAY, Auguft 22.

This morning we received the Paris journals of the 17th, 18th, & 19th, inftant. They contain a letter from General Buonaparte, which our readers will find in its proper place, giving an account of the the raifing the fiege of Peſchiera, and the recapture of Verona by the French troops previous to which the Auftrians made a laft ineffectual effort to retrieve their affairs. The wretched remains of the imperial troops have taken refuge in Tyrol. The Paris journals alfo contain fome official letters from the army of the Sambre and Meufe, but their are dates interior to thofe which reached us on Sunday, and afford only details of operations the refult of which is already known: we therefore poftpone until to morrow thefe and fome other articles of lefs importance.

FRANKFORT, Auguft 6.

Well informed perfons poftively ftate that negociations for an armiftice are on foot. According to them the fortreffes of Ehrenbreitftein and Ehrenbreitftein are to be abandoned to the Prenians, and the Republican troops are to retreat to a certain line of demarkation, to the end, that they may not interrupt the operations of the Congrefs, which is to meet at Hainau. This Congrefs is to be convened by the Emperor jointly with the French Republic. All the powers which have taken a part in the coalition are to fend thither deputies; and after the treaty between the two former powers is concluded, the differences between the others are to be aranged, and the laft had put to a general peace.

NAVAL ENGAGEMENT.

The following extract is copied from a London paper of July 30, 1796.

Extract of a letter from Alicant, June 20.

"The beginning of this month a moft terrible and obftinate battle was fought near Corfica, between an Algerine rover and two Neapolitan frigates, joined by one of the Pope's guards coftas. The action was fevere, long, and bloody; it laſted from ten o'clock in the morning till four in the afternoon, without intermiffion; the combatants were for a long time within piſtol ſhot of each other. The pirate fuffered much, being moft of the time between an inceſſant and well directed fire, which cut away great part of their rigging, and made terrible havoc amongſt the men; yet the ruffians fought with an uncommon degree of deſperation, and attemped many times to board, but were as often repulſed with great loſs. The captain and all the officers were killed in the heat of the act on—the former had both his legs taken off by a chain-ſhot, as he was firing a blunderbuſs, yet the barbarian refuſed to be taken from the deck, and died whilſt giving the word of command. This loſs did not in the leaſt intimidate the terrible crew, who fought like furies, ſwearing in various tongues they would not ſtrike while a man or boy was left alive.—The Chriſtians were equally obſtinate, & fought like lions throughout the whole conflict, and ſhewed great bravery & ſkill—they were to a man fully determined to conquer or die. Unluckily one of the frigates, which bore the greateſt ſtreſs in the action, took fire, and in ſpite of every exertion, ſoon blew up, when moſt of the crew periſhed. Another misfortune preſented itſelf a ſhort time after, which was the loſs of the Pope's cruizer, which was ſunk by the enemy's ſhot, after a gallant reſiſtance. In this ſituation the other frigate was obliged to be towed away, leaving the Algerine like a hog upon the water, having her fore and main maſt carried away by the board, and her hull ſo much pierced and ſhattered, that it was impoſſible ſhe could ever reach Algiers.—The pirate fought under the bloody flag, and mounted 34 guns, beſides patteraroe; the frigates had 20 guns each, and the Pope's cruizer 10 and 8 ſwivel."

Sect. 14. And be it further enacted, That if any person, other than the Postmaster General or his deputies, or such persons as they may employ, shall be concerned in setting up or maintaining any other post, stage waggon or other line of conveyance on any established post road, or in any stage boat or other vessel, to carry letters from one place to another, between which a regular communication by post is or shall be established by the United States, or shall receive any letter or packet of letters or newspapers, magazines or pamphlets, to carry the same by such post, stage waggon or other line of conveyance, or by stage boat or vessel, (excepting such letter or letters, as may be directed to the owner or owners of such conveyance, or relating to the same, or to the cargo thereof, or to whom any package or parcel may be consigned) every person so offending, shall for every such offence, be subject to the same penalty: Provided, That it shall be lawful for any person to send letters or packets by a special messenger.

By order of the Postmaster General.
WILLIAM HABERSHAM.

AND NOTICE is also hereby given, that the mail from Philadelphia to Lancaster will arrive in the same place every evening, at the Post Office, and will go on in a stage with horses provided for the purpose every day morning, and return every day evening, taking the mail as directed by law, which is through Downingtown and Shippensburgh. The mail will go on, on the same days, by stage from Lancaster to Pittsburgh, and will, in addition to the usual number of passengers, and no more, carry any sum of five dollars going, and ten returning, with the usual allowance of baggage, as the stages from Lancaster to Philadelphia will from and after the first day of August, every day, such passengers to defray themselves of a passage from Shippensburgh to Pittsburgh, and proceed on to the city of Philadelphia, excepting Sundays.

The proprietors of the above line entertain a grateful sense of the support they have experienced from the generous public, and as it is their constant study to be punctual, and to furnish good horses, and sober, attentive drivers, they hope for a continuance of their favours.
